

Oil Paintings By Elizabeth L. Mangle

All my paintings are inspired from actual Adirondack wilderness landscapes. I have bushwhacked, skied, canoed or backpacked into very remote areas of the north woods. The beauty of the landscape inspires me.

I started painting with oils in 2000 and I have a wide range of interest in my subject matter.

I enjoy discovering what I can create thru the medium of oils. Once I am excited about what I plan to paint, the process becomes fun and unpredictable. Things happen as a painting develops and it usually takes weeks to finish one painting.

Painting to me is the opposite of photography. The painter doesn't need to capture the essence before it changes instantaneously, you have time to create the essence. It is up to you as the artist to bring out what you see or feel in the scene and recreate it on the canvas. Sometimes it may not even look exactly like what inspired it. Oil painting allows me to take a scene and emphasize its mood. I want the viewer to feel the cold winters day, experience the power of the rushing water or sense the camaraderie of two lone trees in the mist.

I believe that painting are a part of me and I have to admit that is why they are so difficult to sell. But I am still evolving as a painter and an artist, so things may change.

Even though my original oil paintings are not for sale I do make quality prints of them in various sizes (framed to 11X14 or 16X20) to sell. Contact me for more information on how you can have a copy of my paintings. Thank you.
